London, Jan 8 (PTI) Consumers hesitate using smartphonesand tablets to buy goods online because they worry about notseeing the full picture on an app or missing out on specialoffers and overlooking hidden costs, a study has found.

Concerns about privacy and security can also motivatepeople to put items into their shopping baskets but then quitwithout paying, researchers said.

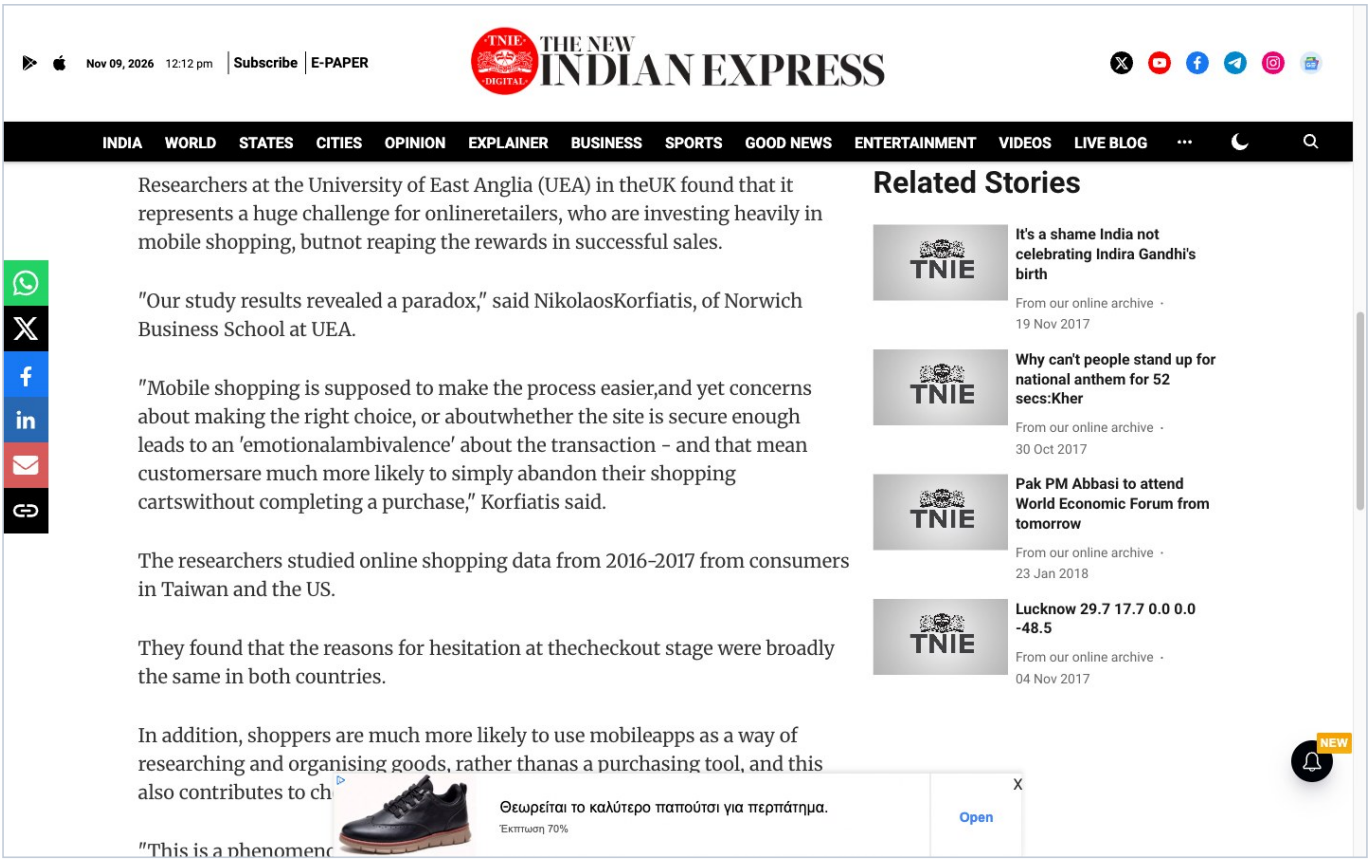

Although mobile apps are rapidly becoming among the mostpopular ways to shop online, the phenomenon of shopping cartabandonment is much higher than for desktop-based onlineshopping, they said.

According to Market Research firm Criteo, the share ofe-commerce traffic

Researchers at the University of East Anglia (UEA) in theUK found that it represents a huge challenge for onlineretailers, who are investing heavily in mobile shopping, butnot reaping the rewards in successful sales.

"Our study results revealed a paradox," said NikolaosKorfiatis, of Norwich Business School at UEA.

"Mobile shopping is supposed to make the process easier,and yet concerns about making the right choice, or aboutwhether the site is secure enough leads to an 'emotionalambivalence' about the transaction - and that mean customersare much more likely to simply abandon their shopping cartswithout completing a purchase," Korfiatis said.

The researchers studied online shopping data from 2016-2017 from consumers in Taiwan and the US.

They found that the reasons for hesitation at thecheckout stage were broadly the same in both countries.

In addition, shoppers are much more likely to use mobileapps as a way of researching and organising goods, rather thanas a purchasing tool, and this also contributes to ch
